Some words on the research design

Research design grades are posted

- Grades are posted on Blackboard, together with a Legend that you can use to interpret the feedback

Research design grades are posted

- Grades are posted on Blackboard, together with a Legend that you can use to interpret the feedback
- Apologies to Group C where I accidentally failed to post the Checklist. This checklist however did not contain anything that wasn't also contained in the Guidelines – it was the same requirements in a different format. Both were 1-page documents.

- As I've said for weeks, this was a hard assignment: a good design requires thoughtful, creative, and academically rigorous work.

- In all but a few cases it's partial rather than complete misalignment with a criterion that subtracted points.

- As I've said for weeks, this was a hard assignment: a good design requires thoughtful, creative, and academically rigorous work.
- In all but a few cases it's partial rather than complete misalignment with a criterion that subtracted points.
- Many designs also had their grade limited by lack of originality and/or academic rigor.

Research design next steps

- If you want to request a revision, you must do so by email and no later than this Friday December 20.

 - Grades can go up but also can go down as a result of a revision
- I will be emailing a few groups where I have strong reasons to suspect submissions were done with excessive input from AI (counter to the AI rules of this course), to the point where the design is, to my eyes, not a product of the team who submitted it.

 - If you get such email, give priority to this as without such a call you will not get a passing grade in the course
