

 The paper opens up the black box of efforts at diversifying bureaucracies by mapping out the obstacles to effective inclusion of female police officers and how they leverage relational work to address them.

- The paper opens up the black box of efforts at diversifying bureaucracies by mapping out the obstacles to effective inclusion of female police officers and how they leverage relational work to address them.
- The paper leverages rich qualitative data from the shadowing of 56 police officers (male and female) in Madhya Pradesh (India) including 6 focus groups and 168 interviews

- The paper opens up the black box of efforts at diversifying bureaucracies by mapping out the obstacles to effective inclusion of female police officers and how they leverage relational work to address them.
- The paper leverages rich qualitative data from the shadowing of 56 police officers (male and female) in Madhya Pradesh (India) – including 6 focus groups and 168 interviews
- The author combines a thick description of qualitative findings with analysis and synthesis, connecting field observations to theoretical contributions – all very transparently.

Points for discussion

Points for discussion

Framing

Situating the case

Performing additional analyses

Points for discussion

Framing

Situating the case

Performing additional analyses

 Articulate more forcefully and up front why this relational work by female police officers matters:

- Articulate more forcefully and up front why this relational work by female police officers matters:
 - diversifying inclusion is not just a matter of top-down, formal, male-enacted institutional reforms

- Articulate more forcefully and up front why this relational work by female police officers matters:
 - diversifying inclusion is not just a matter of top-down, formal, male-enacted institutional reforms
 - after diverse candidates enter, a lot of work is needed for effectively diversifying the bureaucracy

- Articulate more forcefully and up front why this relational work by female police officers matters:
 - diversifying inclusion is not just a matter of top-down, formal, male-enacted institutional reforms
 - after diverse candidates enter, a lot of work is needed for effectively diversifying the bureaucracy
 - without continuous change, a lot of the work needed falls on the shoulders of female / minority entrants.

- Articulate more forcefully and up front why this relational work by female police officers matters:
 - diversifying inclusion is not just a matter of top-down, formal, male-enacted institutional reforms
 - after diverse candidates enter, a lot of work is needed for effectively diversifying the bureaucracy
 - without continuous change, a lot of the work needed falls on the shoulders of female / minority entrants.
- Discuss the costs to the top-down and exclusively formal approach to inclusion:

- Articulate more forcefully and up front why this relational work by female police officers matters:
 - diversifying inclusion is not just a matter of top-down, formal, male-enacted institutional reforms
 - after diverse candidates enter, a lot of work is needed for effectively diversifying the bureaucracy
 - without continuous change, a lot of the work needed falls on the shoulders of female / minority entrants.
- Discuss the costs to the top-down and exclusively formal approach to inclusion:
 - higher rates of burnout / turnover / health problems among female entrants?

- Articulate more forcefully and up front why this relational work by female police officers matters:
 - diversifying inclusion is not just a matter of top-down, formal, male-enacted institutional reforms
 - after diverse candidates enter, a lot of work is needed for effectively diversifying the bureaucracy
 - without continuous change, a lot of the work needed falls on the shoulders of female / minority entrants.
- Discuss the costs to the top-down and exclusively formal approach to inclusion:
 - higher rates of burnout / turnover / health problems among female entrants?
 - differential career trends?

- Articulate more forcefully and up front why this relational work by female police officers matters:
 - diversifying inclusion is not just a matter of top-down, formal, male-enacted institutional reforms
 - after diverse candidates enter, a lot of work is needed for effectively diversifying the bureaucracy
 - without continuous change, a lot of the work needed falls on the shoulders of female / minority entrants.
- Discuss the costs to the top-down and exclusively formal approach to inclusion:
 - higher rates of burnout / turnover / health problems among female entrants?
 - differential career trends?
 - over time, ability to attract female candidates to fill quotas?

 Are the obstacles and the relational strategies identified in the paper common in other settings?

experiences of other minority entrants to street-level bureaucracies?

- experiences of other minority entrants to street-level bureaucracies?
- police forces in other settings, including in the global north?

- experiences of other minority entrants to street-level bureaucracies?
- police forces in other settings, including in the global north?
- Why is the India context useful to learn about female inclusion and empowerment in other bureaucracies?

- experiences of other minority entrants to street-level bureaucracies?
- police forces in other settings, including in the global north?
- Why is the India context useful to learn about female inclusion and empowerment in other bureaucracies?
- In what contexts, if any, would this not be likely to apply?

• Either for this or subsequent papers, the following analyses could help illuminate parts of the argument:

- Either for this or subsequent papers, the following analyses could help illuminate parts of the argument:
 - Comparison of the career progression of female officers, with regards to how effectively they can mobilize relational work

- Either for this or subsequent papers, the following analyses could help illuminate parts of the argument:
 - Comparison of the career progression of female officers, with regards to how effectively they can mobilize relational work
 - Thicker comparisons between the obstacles, experiences, and strategies of male and female officers

- Either for this or subsequent papers, the following analyses could help illuminate parts of the argument:
 - Comparison of the career progression of female officers, with regards to how effectively they can mobilize relational work
 - Thicker comparisons between the obstacles, experiences, and strategies of male and female officers
 - Comparisons between the experiences of these female officers vs female officers from previous cohorts where the quota was only 10%

- Either for this or subsequent papers, the following analyses could help illuminate parts of the argument:
 - Comparison of the career progression of female officers, with regards to how effectively they can mobilize relational work
 - Thicker comparisons between the obstacles, experiences, and strategies of male and female officers
 - Comparisons between the experiences of these female officers vs female officers from previous cohorts where the quota was only 10%
 - Comparisons of male officers as they become more aware of gender issues (or not) through contact with female colleagues

• The paper does a great job at mapping obstacles, relational strategies, and contradictions along the process, in different stages

- The paper does a great job at mapping obstacles, relational strategies, and contradictions along the process, in different stages
- What is less clear is what can be done by other stakeholders to lighten the burden on the minority entrants:

- The paper does a great job at mapping obstacles, relational strategies, and contradictions along the process, in different stages
- What is less clear is what can be done by other stakeholders to lighten the burden on the minority entrants:
 - Male entrants
 - More senior male officers
 - Police force leaders
 - Politicians

- The paper does a great job at mapping obstacles, relational strategies, and contradictions along the process, in different stages
- What is less clear is what can be done by other stakeholders to lighten the burden on the minority entrants:
 - Male entrants
 - More senior male officers
 - Police force leaders
 - Politicians
- The paper would be stronger if it combined highlighting the relational work by women with ideas on how the formal and informal institutions of male domination can be reformed